Marantec 4500e troubleshooting

Below are instructions on how to program a new remote into a Marantec M4500e, M4700e, or M4900e garage door opener. Important: if you have a working remote then scroll down and follow the Programming Additional Remotes instructions otherwise start with the Programming One Remote instructions. If you have one of the Marantec EOS garage door openers (models M4500e, M4700e and M4900e) and don't have any working remotes then you'll need to program one remote into the unit. Any additional remotes that you want to use with the opener will have to be programmed by using a Programming Jumper. You can program a Marantec Digital 382 2-button remote, Digital 384 4-button remote, M3-3313 Key Chain Remote, M3-2312 2-button remote (discontinued model) or a M3-2314 4-button remote (discontinued model) into the powerhead by following the instructions below. *As a side note: "universal" style remotes found in box stores and hardware stores are NOT compatible with Marantec garage door openers. Only Marantec brand remotes work with the Marantec operators. PROGRAMMING ONE REMOTE *Look at the powerhead (motor unit on the ceiling) and you'll see the eight Red LED lights and the three programming buttons (P, +, -) Press and HOLD the "P" button for about 3 seconds LED lights #8,1 & 2 will light up solid Press & RELEASE the "P" button 2 times Now LED lights #6, 7, & 8 should be lit up Press & HOLD the button on the remote that you would like to use to operate the opener While you are holding the remote button you should see #7 LED light flash rapidly Now release the remote button Push and RELEASE the "P" button one time & you will exit the programming mode Congratulations....you just programmed the remote PROGRAMMING ADDITIONAL REMOTES Now, what if you have additional remotes that you want to program? This is where the programming jumper comes into play and it looks like this: Here are the instructions to program additional remotes using the program jumper after you programmed one remote into the opener: You connect the jumper between the existing programmed remote and the new remote Press and HOLD the button on the existing remote that currently works your opener Then press & HOLD the button on the new remote that you want to work the opener The LED light on the remotes flicker & you're done. Automatic garage door openers are prone to a variety of problems, most of which are fairly easy to fix with routine troubleshooting and maintenance. But one of the more perplexing issues is when the door goes up and down by itself, with no help from you. It can seem quite ghostly, having your garage door operate with a mind of its own. It can also be a security problem when it opens to expose your belongings when you aren't home. A garage door that closes on its own can also be a safety concern, especially in a home with children. There are several places you can begin looking for solutions to this strange behavior. Illustration: The Spruce / Joshua Seong In rare instances, a nearby neighbor may have a garage door opener set to the same wireless code as your opener. This is rare, but it does occasionally happen. It is quite easy to check—just have your neighbor activate his or her garage door and see if your door begins to move. The solution here is for you to reset your garage opener to a new code—every garage door opener has instructions for how to do this. An exposed spot or a short circuit in the small-gauge wire that leads from the garage door opener's motor unit to the control button on the wall may well cause your garage door to operate all on its own. All that's necessary for this to happen is for a bare spot in the wire to brush up against the metal door track or another part—the electrical impulse will cause the motor unit to be activated. Another thing to check is the wiring between each of the safety sensor eyes at the sides of the door and the motor unit. These are low-voltage wires, so you don't have to worry about shutting off the power to check them. Look for damaged insulation, bare strands of wire, or even a nail or staple piercing the wire. When this happens, it's often down near the sensor eyes themselves, where mice can sometimes chew through the insulation or the wires are damaged by a broom or shovel. It's a fairly easy matter to replace these small wires. The wire can be purchased at any home improvement center or hardware store. If the wires appear to be in good shape, next look at the control button mounted near your side entry door. If it is old or dirty, the button may stick. The symptom of this is a garage door that is in constant motion, opening fully then immediately descending, only to start the same cycle again. There may also be loose wire connections inside the button housing itself. As these wires short against the housing, the electrical impulse causes the door opener to activate. Replacing a malfunctioning control button is another very easy fix. When a garage door descends on command but then immediately reverses itself, the problem is usually with the sensor eyes along the side tracks or with the door's wheels binding in their tracks. But when the door begins to descend all on its own, the problem may point to the opener's logic board or the circuitry inside the motor unit itself. Garage door technicians have reported instances of this, sometimes accompanied by the opener's lights flashing, much in the same way that some door openers flash when the sensor eyes detect an obstacle. Theoretically, it might be possible to repair circuit board problems—the problem could be a matter of resoldering a loose connection. This isn't a project for most casual DIYers, although it might be worth the exploration if the alternative is to replace the garage door opener anyway. But having a service technician come out to attempt such a repair will probably cost you as much—or more—than replacing the garage door opener entirely. Installing a new opener is a very doable project for any moderately handy person. Given that the problems with your opener pose real safety and security risks, a new opener makes a lot of sense if you can't stop its mysterious behavior soon.
